PK-6th News

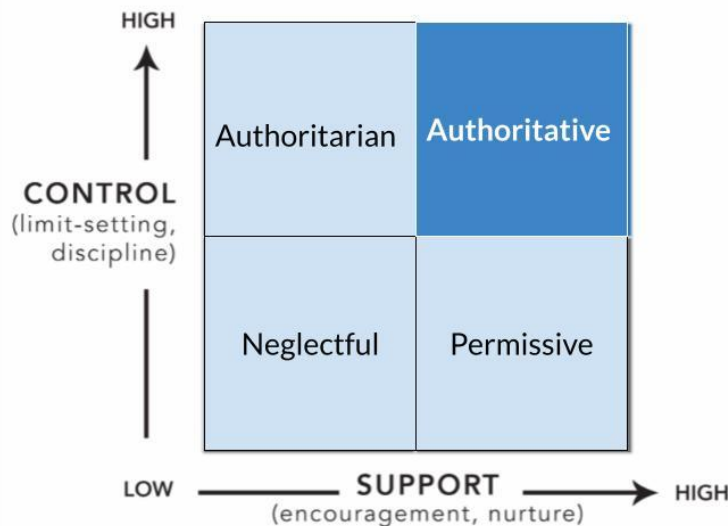

PK-6th Laker of the Week

Anders Euler, Kindergarten, is the PK-6 Laker of the week. Parents are Anthony and Cassandra Euler. Anders is usually the first one in my classroom each morning and arrives with a smile on his face and ready to do his morning jobs. One thing I love about Anders is his positive attitude about learning. Even if something is hard for him, he accepts the challenge and does his very best and doesn't give up. He's excited to learn! He works hard all the time and doesn't get discouraged when things don't go his way. He is respectful to all his teachers, helpful, kind, responsible, safe and cooperative. He is a good friend to everyone in our classroom. We cheer for you Anders...what a fine boy you are! ~Mrs. Miller

Parenting Corner

Heather Cox,
Shell Lake Elementary Principal

Authoritative Parenting (vs. authoritarian or permissive)

Parenting styles can fit into any one of the categories above. Parents who offer lots of warmth, nurturing and support but with very little discipline, low expectations and minimal limits are permissive. Permissive parents are not giving their children high enough expectations or the limits that children crave. There is security for children in knowing that there is someone who is in charge and life doesn't revolve around their desires and wishes. On the other hand, parents who have very strong limits and discipline without encouragement or support are called authoritarian. Authoritarian parents may use controlling methods to exact behaviors out of children and limit their children's ability to make decisions on their own. It's easy for us as parents to swing between being too permissive when we don't want to hurt our children's feelings or towards being overly authoritarian when they are disrespectful and disobedient. However, the most effective parenting style is to be authoritative or as I call it, a warm demander. Parents can be caring, warm and supportive but also expect respect from their children and create clear boundaries for behaviors. Consistent and calm discipline gives children a sense of security - they know what to expect and they also have the strong foundation of parental love and support to be able to meet those expectations

7th-12th News

7th-12th Lakers of the Week
