

Gov. Evers granted pardons to the following people:

- Pedro Acevedo was in his early 20s when he got into a physical altercation. Now, over two decades later, Acevedo owns and operates a barber shop and is a proud grandfather.
- Michael Allan was in his early 20s when he and a friend broke into someone's shed and stole various items. Now, two decades later, Allan has had successful employment as a driver and is a proud homeowner. The Court supports his pardon.
- Richard Balck was in his early 30s when he eluded an officer while under the influence. Now, over two and a half decades later, Balck is a certified crane and forklift operator and has maintained steady employment with the same company since 1995.
- Brian Bargaquast was in his early 20s when he sold a controlled substance to an undercover officer. Now, over three decades later, Bargaquast has earned forklift certification and a commercial driver's license (CDL). The district attorney's office also supports his pardon.
- Dustin Bartsch was in his late teens when he stole equipment from a high school. Two decades later, he completed special work certifications from the Institute of Packaging Professionals and volunteers for outdoor cleanup.
- Robert Batzler was in his late 40s when he was found in possession of marijuana in his home. Over 20 years later, Batzler has maintained steady employment as a carpenter.
- Cameron Beeney was in his late teens when he and a friend broke into a business and stole cash, checks, and credit card receipts. He was in his early 20s when he stole from a store and was caught with marijuana in his possession. Nearly a decade later, Beeney now resides with family and has received four certificates in welding.
- Anthony Cervantes was in his early 20s when he was found in possession of marijuana. Over a decade later, Cervantes has maintained steady employment as a taxi and limo driver since 2005.
- Daniesha Coleman was in her early 20s when she was found in possession of marijuana and a controlled substance. Coleman has moved out of the state and obtained a master's degree. She is employed as a business manager.
- Amanda Connors was in her late teens and a mother of two trying to support her children when she sold a controlled substance to a confidential informant. Two decades later, Connors pursued further education and volunteers in her community, where she resides with her family.
- Harold Coots was in his early 20s when he and others entered a garage and stole personal items from the owner. Dedicated to furthering his education, Coots obtained an associate degree in business-to-business marketing, completed three years of college coursework, and is currently enrolled at a Technical College for HVAC.
- Jennifer Crawford was in her late teens when she sold a controlled substance to an undercover officer. Three decades later, Crawford obtained both a certified nursing assistant (CNA) and a community-based residential facilities (CBRF) certification.
- Brandon Davison was in his late teens when he sold a controlled substance to an undercover officer. Over the past two decades, Davison has earned a technical diploma in computer numeric control and completed training at the Professional CDL Training Institute.

- John Demers was in his mid-20s when he sold a controlled substance to an undercover officer. Over the past three decades, Demers has completed a mason apprenticeship and started a family.
- Kristopher Depner was a teenager when he sold marijuana to a confidential informant on three separate occasions, over 20 years ago. Now, Depner resides with his family and has maintained employment as an installer.
- Santana Dillon was in her late teens and trying to support herself and her child when she attempted to cash a fraudulent check. Now over a decade later, Dillon earned her master's degree in education and maintained successful employment as a middle school teacher.
- Casey Duffy was in her late 20s when she was found with marijuana in her residence. Over a decade later, Duffy has shown personal growth and positive adjustment. The district attorney's office also supports her pardon.
- Teresa DuPree was in her 20s when she was found with a controlled substance in her residence. Three decades later, DuPree moved out of the state and lives with family. She has earned a master's degree in nursing. The Court and district attorney's office also supports her pardon.
- Lee Econom was in his early 20s when he sold marijuana to an undercover officer. Almost two decades later, Econom has obtained an associate degree and volunteers in his community.
- Natalie Erickson was in her late teens when she sold a controlled substance to an undercover officer. Over a decade later, Erickson has earned an MBA and bachelor's degree in accounting and volunteers at a variety of community organizations including women's shelters, food pantries, and bible school.
- Nicholas Ernst was in his 20s when he was found in possession of a controlled substance and other drug paraphernalia. Almost two decades later, Ernst earned his GED and completed various training courses for welding, plumbing, and OSHA safety.
- Dennis Falck was in his mid-50s when he was found participating in a marijuana-growing operation. In the past 20 years, Falck has become an active volunteer in his church and Quaker community and has served as the convener of the Land Compliance Committee and the Communications Committee.
- Jamie Farr was in his mid-20s when he was found in possession of marijuana and other drug paraphernalia. Now in his late 50s, Farr has maintained steady employment as a welder since 1995.
- Brandon Fickbohm was in his late teens when he and others stole cash and various items from several bars. Now over a decade later, Fickbohm received his technical diploma and is now enrolled in a registered nursing program.
- Brock Folts was in his early 20s when he was found with marijuana in his residence. Over a decade later, Folts resides with his family.

- James Freson was in his late 30s when he was found in possession of marijuana and controlled substances. Now, three decades later, Freson is retired after maintaining steady employment at the same company for nearly 40 years.
- Raul Garcia Jr. was in his late teens when he was found in possession of marijuana. Almost a decade later, Garcia has maintained steady employment and is a dedicated father and husband.
- Brian Gehler was in his early 20s when police attempted to pull him over for erratic driving but continued to speed away. Now, Gehler is a business owner and received substantial support for a pardon.
- Juan Guadalupe was in his late teens when he was found in possession of marijuana. Nearly two decades later, Guadalupe earned a variety of professional certifications and has worked for a trucking company.
- Cody Gudowicz was in his teens when he burglarized cabins and sheds. Now over a decade later, Gudowicz has earned his GED and received certifications for MSHA, OSHA 10, Rigging, and Operating.
- Lois Hachtel was in her late 30s when she failed to report her income while receiving state assistance. Now two and a half decades later, Hachtel has maintained employment in juvenile corrections for 17 years. The Court and district attorney's office also supports her pardon.
- Joshua Haus was in his late teens when marijuana was found in his residence. Now residing out of state, Haus has obtained a master's degree in interdisciplinary studies, became an ordained pastor, and is an active volunteer in his community. The Court supports his pardon.
- Christopher Henry was in his mid-30s when he was found in possession of marijuana. Now over two decades later, Henry has completed coursework toward a degree in forestry and volunteers with a local softball league.
- Charles Hermann was in his early 20s when he was found in possession of marijuana. Now, Hermann has started a family and maintained steady employment with UPS for over two decades.
- Laticia Jackson was in her mid-20s when she failed to report her income and in her early 30s when she was found in possession of a controlled substance. Now, two and a half decades later, Jackson has maintained steady employment as a caretaker after completing a variety of certifications.
- Tilwanna Jackson was in her early 20s when she used worthless checks. Almost two decades later, Jackson completed her GED, earned her cosmetology diploma, and received a certification as a nursing aid.
- Timothy Jefferson was in his early 20s when he was found with a controlled substance, an illegal firearm, and twice with marijuana. Over a decade later, Jefferson maintained successful employment as an electrician.
- Charsetta Jordan was in her early 30s and in an abusive relationship when she stole a friend's personal items and cashed fraudulent checks. Regarded as a mentor to youth, Jordan is active in her community serving on multiple community boards.

- Jessica King was in her early 20s when she assisted in the sale of a controlled substance. Now over two decades later, King fosters children, started a resource agency for at-risk pregnant women, and maintains employment at a counseling clinic.
- Gina Kluiber was in her late teens when she stole a checkbook on two occasions. Two decades later, Kluiber obtained an associate degree in medical assisting and now resides with family.
- Daniel Korderca was in his 20s when he sold a controlled substance to an undercover officer. Now retired, Korderca is a grandfather and maintained employment as an assembler for 45 years.
- Nicholas Kraemer was in his late teens when he and a friend stole propellers from boats. Now two decades later, Kraemer has maintained steady employment as a general laborer supervisor.
- Matthew Kramer was in his early 20s when he was found in possession of marijuana. Now three decades later, Kramer has completed a variety of certifications and has maintained steady employment with the same company for 14 years.
- Louis Krueger was in his mid-30s when he sold a controlled substance and recklessly endangered safety fleeing an officer. Now over three decades later, Krueger owns his own business after earning a technical degree in refrigeration services.
- Kenneth Lambrecht was in his late teens when he was found in possession of marijuana. Now over two decades later, Lambrecht has maintained steady employment in the mill industry and has raised four children.
- Brian LaPlante was in his early 20s when he sold controlled substances. Now almost three decades later, LaPlante has been sober for over a decade and has maintained steady employment with the same company since 2000.
- Sabrina Lasky was in her teens when she injured officers during an arrest while under the influence and damaged police property. Now over two decades later, she has maintained steady employment and completed three years of a paralegal program.
- Deondra Lewis was in his late teens when he and a friend conducted an armed robbery. Now, over a decade later, Lewis is married with children and has maintained employment at the same company.
- Michelle Linsy was in her early 20s when she failed to report her income for state assistance. Three decades later, Linsy has completed various certifications as well as a practical nurse licensure.
- Hajrush Ljattifovski was in his early 20s when he was found in possession of a controlled substance. Over three decades later, Ljattifovski resides with his family and has obtained an associate degree, received certificates of appreciation, and is an active volunteer.
- Daryl Logan Jr was in his early 20s when he was found selling a controlled substance. Over two decades later, Logan has earned an autobody degree and worked as an autobody technician estimator since 2011.
- Mace Mattison was in his early 30s when he physically assaulted two victims. Now over two decades later, Mattison has maintained sobriety for over two and half decades and owned and operated a logging business for nearly three decades.

- Damian McClendon was in his early 30s when he was found in possession of marijuana. Now almost two decades later, McClendon owns his own business and is a proud father and grandfather.
- Jacqueline Mentink was in her early 20s when she was found in possession of controlled substances. Now a decade later, Mentink has worked at a recovery center and is currently pursuing a real estate license. The Court also supports her pardon.
- Shatrece Minett was in her late teens when she participated in a burglary and stole personal items. Minett has since obtained an associate degree in human services and now volunteers in her community.
- Audie Murphy operated a vehicle without the owner's consent, was found in possession of controlled substances, and later obstructed an officer. Now a decade later, Murphy earned a group home license and currently owns and operates a group home for children. Murphy has also completed alcohol and other drug abuse (AODA) treatment and is in training to become a substance abuse counselor.
- Dale Nielson was in his early 20s when he assisted someone in cashing fraudulent checks. Nielson has since maintained successful employment in the electrical work and security systems field. He has moved out of the state with family. The Court also supports his pardon.
- Faye Peters was in her late 30s when she was found in possession of a controlled substance on two occasions, the second including bail jumping. Over two decades later, Peters obtained a master's degree and is an active volunteer. The district attorney's office supports her pardon.
- Scot Peterson was in his mid-50s when he manufactured and sold marijuana. Now residing with his family, Peterson maintained employment and is an active volunteer in his community.
- Tina Peterson was in her early 20s when she sold a controlled substance to an undercover officer on two separate occasions. Now, Peterson has obtained an associate degree and maintained employment in the medical field since 2008.
- Tina Powers was in her mid-20s when she failed to report a household member's income while receiving public assistance. Over three decades later, Powers has owned and operated a secondhand store while raising four children with special needs as a single parent.
- Michelle Rangel was in his late 30s and having financial difficulties when she stole a woman's wallet. Rangle now resides with family.
- Nicholas Rasmussen was in his early 20s when he burglarized a home with friends. Now, over two decades later, Rasmussen has maintained steady employment and earned certifications in apprenticeship and journeyman as well as scientific injection molding of thermoplastics.
- Teila Safford was in her early 20s and a single mother struggling financially when she used someone's ID to open a checking account. Over a decade later, she now resides with family. Safford received significant support for her pardon and has since obtained her associate degree in early childhood education and is currently pursuing a bachelor's degree.

- Bruce Sarow was in his late teens when he sold marijuana to a confidential informant on three separate occasions, nearly two decades ago. Now residing with his family, Sarow owns and operates his own small business and has obtained various certificates.
- Matthew Schlitt was in his early 20s when officers found marijuana and other drug paraphernalia in his residence. Nearly 30 years later, Schlitt resides with his family, where he works as an estimating supervisor for a real estate agency. The district attorney's office supports his pardon.
- Julie Schulz was in her 30s when she was found manufacturing and in possession of a controlled substance. Now, over two decades later, Schulz has maintained steady employment and has completed certifications in psychology and socioeconomics.
- Thomas Tabaska was in his late 40s and struggling to support his family when he attempted to sell a controlled substance to a confidential informant over a decade ago. Tabaska now holds a Wisconsin master electrician and Wisconsin professional engineer license. He has maintained successful employment as a journeyman.
- Kowanya Thomas was a single mother in her early 20s when she failed to report receipt of income and committed food stamp fraud. The Court also supports her pardon.
- Chaz Thompson was in his late teens when he was found in possession of marijuana. Now, two decades later, Thompson has earned a bachelor's degree in business administration, obtained a real estate license, and has started two successful businesses.
- Joah Tucker was in his late 20s when he was found growing marijuana. Now, over a decade later, Tucker owns and operates a real estate business.
- Janel Tunison was in her late teens when she burglarized homes and used forged checks. Now, over two decades later, Tunison has earned a bachelor's degree in business administration and maintained employment as a certified clinical research coordinator in the healthcare field.
- Joseph Turcotte was in his late teens when he sold an undercover officer a controlled substance. Almost five decades later, Turcotte has maintained steady employment and has become a proud grandfather.
- Scott Vanden Heuvel was in his late 20s when he was found in possession of marijuana. Now, over two decades later, Vanden Heuvel has worked as a project manager for a real estate developer for 13 years and has become a grandfather.
- Michael Wemmer was in his late teens when he was involved in multiple burglaries. Now, three decades later, Wemmer is married with two children and has worked as a service advisor and manager in the vehicle dealership industry.
- Theresa Wesby was in her early 30s when she failed to return to jail and, a few years later, stole personal items from someone's home. Over two decades later, Wesby received her CDL license and has maintained successful employment as a school bus driver.
- Monicka Whitehead was in her early 20s when she cashed fraudulent checks and got into a physical altercation with her stepfather. Now, two decades later, Whitehead has obtained a CNA license, manicurist license, DCFS Family Certificate, and currently owns and operates a small business.

- Ann Willis was in her late 20s when she sold a controlled substance to an undercover officer. Over two decades later, Willis obtained a Wisconsin accident and health license and has worked as a customer service representative in the field.
- Barbara Womack was in her late 20s and early 30s when she failed to report income while receiving public assistance. Now, over two decades later, Womack is raising her grandchildren following her daughter's passing.
- John Wurm was in his early 40s when he was found in possession of marijuana. Almost two decades later, Wurm has shown personal growth and positive adjustment.
- Michael Yokers was in his early 20s when he sold marijuana to an undercover officer. Now, over four decades later, Yokers has obtained a bachelor's degree and maintained employment in real estate for nearly 40 years. The Court also supports his pardon.
- Ralph Zempel was in his mid-20s when he sold a controlled substance to a confidential informant. Over three decades later, Zempel owns and operates his own asbestos removal company. The Court supports his pardon.